Forr Monrox is a splendid fortification, and would resist a very large attaching force. It ecoloses 75 acres of ground. It has two tiers of guns, casemates and barbettes, and it was thought there were over three hundred guns within its walls. It is situated a mile and a half from the main land, and completely commands Hampton Roads and the envance to James River, and is of much importance in a military point of view. The peninsula on which it stands is about on the hundred yards in width, and, of course, commanded by the guns of the fortress. An attack on this strenghold could not be successful unless by a force of tens of thomsands, as, in addition to its strength of position, it is surrounded by an outside wall of grantife. Between this wall and the walls of the fort is a most of twelve feet deep, and one hundred and twenty-five feet in width.
